POST-CONSUMER
RECYCLED PLASTIC

For the most part, recycled post-consumer plastic (PCP) is obtained from technical (domestic) appliances or other forms of plastic consumer waste. This process involves collecting and grading plastics and recycling each grade separately. After the recycling process, a new product can be , upcycled' from what are known as post-consumer or also post industry plastics. Without exception, the recycling of plastics uses less crude oil and power.

rABS – recycled plastic: Recycled ABS plastic is made from industrial injection moulding offcuts. For this, plastic waste is collected up and directed back into the injection moulding process. The collected plastics can be collected, graded and grouped by quality standard. These preparatory operations with plastics are the key to manufacturing a recycled product. Without exception, the recycling of plastics uses less crude oil and power.
